My recent mind-control experience: depressing conclusions

< on: June 16, 2012, 05:44:36 PM >

I have in other posts talked about my mind-control experiences. I would like to share with you here some of my recent observations. I was implanted with a brain chip back in December 2009 because of a secret lawsuit between the CIA and the Russian intelligence SVR in the International Court of Justice. I am the "evidence" of the trial. To conclude the trial, those who have gained control of it (those on the prosecuting side) have decided to interface my thoughts, via the brain chip, to the big computer in the courthouse to allow them to gather my thoughts as evidence and to update me on the progress of the trial. When I don't conform to the profile they have established for me - to the profile they need in order to win or conclude the trial - the microchip also allows them to remotely control my thoughts and behavior so that I can be changed into a different person who conforms to the profile. They do this simply by programming the computer to which my thoughts are interfaced to remotely control me to think and behave in conformity to the profile they have decided that I must be. Those in control of the trial have also microchipped every single person I know in order for the computer to establish absolute control over my thoughts, feelings, and behavior by remotely controlling other people's reaction to me so that I will also be forced by my significant others' reactions toward me to conform to the profile they have decided that I must be. Their need for me to conform to what they would like me to be in order to win the trial is the source of all my mind-control sufferings.

The knowledge that everyone important in my life has been microchipped is just unbearable. The profile of me which those in control of the trial have needed in order to win the trial is a person who is stupid, insane, violent, autistic, and perpetually suicidal, and thus all my former friends are remotely controlled to distance themselves from me, to not hear me when I speak to them, and to drop me from their life, so that I can gradually be isolated and provoked; my environment and my computer are also remotely controlled to malfunction to frustrate me, and I would be remotely controlled to overreact to these frustrations, remotely controlled to throw chairs in public places so as to get myself into trouble with the police and security guards. The goal is that, after I have conformed to the awful profile, I may gradually become so depressed that I go end my life. When the trial is entering its end, those who have lost the trial (the defendants in the trial) would like me to get rid of myself - they want me to find ways to end my life of my own accord so that no one will know that I'm remotely controlled to end my life but everyone will think that I have just suddenly gone insane and that it's all my own faults - and those in control of the trial (the prosecuting side) are quite okay with this because they can then charge the defendants with the addition crime of destruction of evidence.

In my previous writings I have described several types of brain chips which I have seen used on the people whom the control center (where the trial is located) sent to me. The most frequently used is however the thought-reading microchip. The fact that the trial uses mostly the thought-reading microchips to remotely control me and my friends is the only good news, for it means that there is limitation to the ability of the computer in the control center to remotely control all of us. It can only remotely control us to do what we know how to do, to say what we know how to say, to feel what we know how to feel. Not just that: it can only remotely control us to do what we usually do, to say what we usually say, to feel what we usually feel. This is because the thought-reading microchip was not originally designed to remotely control people, but its potential to do so has been gradually discovered during the course of this trial. Those in control of the trial have discovered that the computer in the control center can remotely control your thoughts by selecting, among your own thoughts, what thoughts you should think. So basically the computer is telling you which thoughts among all of your thoughts you should think. Thus, you can say that the computer is thinking for you with your own thoughts. The advantage is that, since the thoughts which you are remotely controlled to think are just your own thoughts, you won't notice that you are being remotely controlled. You would think you still have your free will, whereas, in reality, the computer has hijacked your free will. The limitation is that any friend of mine who has no desires for cruelty inside her will not be remotely controlled by the computer to suddenly act cruelly toward me, just as I cannot be remotely controlled to understand the details of quantum mechanics. Thus, the defendants in the trial cannot just remotely control me to suddenly kill myself for no reason. They will have to gradually develop my thoughts and feelings to the point where I will have the courage to kill myself because I have never had the courage to just run into cars or jump off a building. On the other hand, if any strangers around me have been "chipped" with the set of microchips reducing them to the state of command hallucination, those who have never been cruel could presumably be remotely controlled to kill me.

Another unbearable aspect of the microchip system is that the computer to which my thoughts are interfaced can predict my thoughts. The most frightening thing I have noticed lately is that, after my thoughts have been interfaced with the big computer in the court house for two years, the computer has come to know me far better than I know myself, to the point that it can predict what exactly I'll think and do on what future time. The domination is so subtle and so unnoticeable, and yet so complete. I subsist every day in the illusion of a free will. My recent reflection has me realize that, if the computer just reads my thoughts, its prediction of what my thoughts will be at 5 PM two days from now may not be 100 percent accurate, although at any second it can produce an accurate evaluation of what I'm capable of thinking (which I haven't yet thought of) based on what I already know. This is an assessment of what I may be soon thinking which I haven't yet thought of. Presently the computer is able to predict what my thoughts will be in the future with great accuracy because it is not just reading my thoughts but also remotely controlling my thoughts in the above manner. It can thus make me think tomorrow on 5 PM what it has predicted I will think tomorrow on 5 PM - all so that it may then proclaim it has accurately predicted what I'm going to think tomorrow on 5 PM. The computer can cheat, in other words.

Now an interesting situation then arises. Take a look at my writing: www.lawrencechin2011.com. I have been for the past few years attempting to write a narrative of how this torturing secret trial at the International Court has come about, and how it has progressed. I'm now working on Volume 3 and part of Volume 4 of the narrative, which is projected to consist of 5 volumes. The computer can in the next hour produce the entire remaining two and a half volumes which I'm supposed to finish writing in the next three years. What I'm going to write is not just the result of my current knowledge about the trial, but also the result of my examination of the notes and recordings and documentaries I have made of the trial process, and of what I will read in the future. Now those in control of the trial or the control center have already fed copies of my notes, recordings, and documentaries and all the books and websites out there in the world into the computer. The computer can therefore predict what I may write in the future, using its knowledge of what I currently know, what records I have of the trial, and what information out there I may find in the future. If the computer does not control my thoughts, my environment, and my significant others, what I will actually write in the next three years might differ in some respect from what it has predicted I will write. But as long as the microchip is inside my head, the computer can artificially make me write what it has predicted I will write, so that it may then take credit for having accurately predicted what I will write in the future – for having written my book before I actually write it, for having written my book faster than I can write my book.

If you have this thought-reading microchip inside your head, after the computer has read your thoughts for about two years, the computer can actually know how to be you in the future better than you know how to be yourself in the future. For example, during the course of the trial, Putin has allowed the computer to read his thoughts for more than a year (although he didn't allow the computer to be able to remotely control him, unlike in the case of myself and my friends), and the computer already knows how to be Putin better than Putin knows how to be himself. Hypothetically speaking, Putin can therefore just put the computer in the Kremlin, and it will interact with Putin's subordinates in just the way in which Putin will interact with them if he is personally there. In other words, Putin can leave the computer there in his place in the Kremlin while he himself goes fishing in the Black Sea for the rest of his life, and he can trust that the computer will successfully rule Russia in just the way he would like to rule Russia himself. He no longer has to labor to rule Russia. I doubt that he will do that, though, for obvious reasons.

The control center lets me post this secret here because the people in there know that no one will understand anything I say here, let alone believe it.

To continue my observation:

This trial I'm referring to here has allowed a team of civilian psychologists to glimpse into the formerly top-secret DARPA thought-reading technology (the thought-reading microchips and thought-reading computer).

"They discover that the human brain actually works much differently than previously thought. Since the thought-reading computer can predict what my mental associations will be when I hear a certain word even though, since my interface with the computer, I have never heard that word and thus have never had the chance to produce the mental associations in reaction to the word, the thought-reading computer must have had access to all those memories which I have never explicitly recalled to my conscious mind. It can access the "unconscious", in other words. But since the microchip inside my head supposedly reads my thoughts by picking up the electrical activities in my brain – since it doesn't actually have access to the neurotransmitters which are the ultimate causes of my thoughts and to the physical configurations of synapses and neurons which are the actual storages of my memories – my "unconscious" (my unrecalled memories) must be working and generating electrical activities even when I am not conscious of my unconscious. In other words, consciousness accounts for only a small portion of the actual electrical activities that are happening in the brain at any moment."

To continue my observation (from my blog):

"I have noticed that, in order to microchip all my friends and the tens of thousands of Los Angeles residents around me for the sake of this trial, the control center did not have to send a Homeland Security agent to each person's house in the middle of the night. I suppose that, in the past, Homeland Security agents would sneak into your house while you sleep and push a mechanical injector against the back of your head. The injector would use laser or something like that to drill a tiny hole through your skull and then insert the nanochip inside your brain. Since the nanochip is less than 1mm in size, the hole is so small that you wouldn't feel a thing. I realize now that the control center could send out hundreds of these tiny robot mosquito drones which would fly into your house while you are sleeping, land on your head, drill a hole in the same way, and insert the nanochip into your brain. Presumably, the process can work reversely: the control center could send this robot fly to you while you are sleeping, locate where the microchip has been inserted into your brain (the computer in the control center would remember the exact location down to nanometers), drill a hole, and then take out the microchip. Both the Microspherians (the defendants who have lost the trial) and the Macrospherians (the prosecuting side who has won, and is in control of, the trial) could use this method to clandestinely withdraw the tens of thousands, or hundreds of thousands, of microchips that have been implanted in people's heads because of this trial. In this way, they can cover up this most secret trial which has secretly changed the entire arrangement of the world and leave not a trace behind."

THERE IS LIGHT IN RUSSIA: IN RUSSIA I WISH TO FIND ACCEPTANCE OF MY STIGMA.

Since certain personages in the control center/ trial want me dead, they have programed the computer to which my thoughts are interfaced to remotely control me to maintain myself in a perpetual suicidal mood.(The actual situation inside the trial is in fact far more convoluted, but I don't need to discuss that to make my point. I don't really know.) As I have noted, the computer has been remotely controlling me to run into frustrating circumstances almost daily, in order to gradually wear out my will to live. But, to maintain me in a suicidal mood, the computer some times doesn't need to do more than keep me aware that I am being remotely controlled every second of my life. As I have said, the purpose of this mind-control system is to conclude a trial, to make me and all the people I'm in contact with (and more people beyond) produce evidences for our unwilling (and often unknowing) participation in a criminal conspiracy of some Western elites to harm Russia (and its new allies) so that Russia (and its new allies) may get compensated through the International Court system. Every day when I wake up, I will be remotely controlled to waste my time running here and there for nothing, to read this and that book, to surf onto this and that website, to formulate this and that plan for oversea traveling, to meet this and that person, to get rejected by this and that new friend, to be detained by police and security guards for this and that stupid reason, to get provoked by this and that vagrant, to feel tormented by simple noises and movement of people and machine malfunctioning, to think thoughts and feel feelings which I don't want to think and feel, all in order to produce the evidences needed to benefit some foreign countries I have never been to. I get no breaks, no rewards, and no pays; it's a full time job, or total slavery. The knowledge that I have to run around every day to do someone else's work and are only allowed to make friends and meet new people to the extent that this may produce the evidences needed to benefit those foreign nations, makes me understand that my life is really not worth living. Then there is the painful realization that this computer in the control center has already decided what my future life will be like, and that I'm here only to discover what the computer has planned for me. This computer – or rather those who have programed it – is thus my God. It's depressing that this "God" over me turns out to be just a computer which has been programed by a bunch of human beings who cannot be trusted because, although they have the power of God, they have neither the compassion nor the wisdom of God. Don't get me wrong: the leading nation of those nations which are benefiting from my suffering is Russia, and I like it when Russia wins. It's just that I want to die also, because there is nothing else in it for me.

The most painful part of this ordeal is that I can't really talk about it with anybody. The unfairness of enslavement to do someone else's work and to experience pain for someone else's benefits through the microchip inside my head has become the most dominant theme in my consciousness; I think about it every second of my waking life, almost. Every second, when I'm doing something, I think about how what I'm doing now is what I have been remotely controlled to do for someone else's benefit and not for my own, and is what I have not the choice to not do. The pain I'm experiencing can be considerably eased if I'm living with someone, or am constantly with someone, to whom I can confide the constant flow of my interpretation as to why I'm remotely controlled to do what I'm doing and by whom. And yet I'm alone most of the time. I attend a variety of meetings and support groups for targeted individuals, but no one I meet there has the education or intellect to understand the kind of mind-control experience I'm describing here. They can only understand the most rudimentary form of mind-control technology and the simplest kind of sadistic victimization which does not involve factions, international laws, and geopolitics. Do you remember the movie "Europa Europa"? The Jewish boy in that movie lives in Nazi Germany and has to hide his Jewish identity in order to survive. He carries a stigma which he can never tell others about it. He lives in a poisonous environment, even though everybody loves him because everyone believes he is a pure and brave Aryan. He is unhappy because he has to hide himself in order to be liked. The love which the German people have for him becomes more and more a torture for him. Gradually, all he wants to do is tell another person that he is really Jewish. He finally tells a German soldier who is safe because the man is gay and likes him and will not turn him in. When you carry a stigma, the most important thing is to be able to tell others about it and get accepted by them nevertheless. Otherwise you will gradually eat yourself up.

Talking about a trauma is in itself a form of therapy! A healing process. Next to this, if you ever want to get help – if I ever want to extract the microchip – I would have to tell my helper about it, right? But talking about it is the most difficult thing I'm faced with at the moment.

All the people I know are clandestinely microchipped because of me, and to most of them I simply cannot explain that they have been microchipped, and why they have been microchipped. I can't even talk about microchipping with the other people in my life who are similarly microchipped because the control center/ the court has decided not to let other victims of its microchipping know about it while it constantly makes me know about it! And yet unless the control center tells them, they will never believe that they are microchipped and controlled! The story is just too far off. It sounds too much like science fiction movie and not like reality: one day, the "control center" secretly microchips, right in their brain, a significant portion of a given society and brings them under the remote control of a giant computer in the "control center". All the victims are now being remotely controlled by the computer to live out a life which the computer has predetermined for them, without anybody noticing it anything at all. Only one person among them all wakes up to the truth, and he tells everyone that everyone is microchipped and no one takes him seriously. How can this be real? Furthermore, the "control center" is not the government, even though it is built by the government. This is not some sort of secret government experimentation nor is it the precursor of "New World Order" – the only things which my targeted individuals support group can understand as the causes of microchipping. Rather, it is done as part of a secret trial, which requires that a significant portion of the American and NATO population be microchipped and remotely controlled to participate, without knowing so, in a criminal conspiracy of Western elites to harm Russia and its new allies so that Russia can be compensated for being so harmed. The very purpose of this trial, in other words, is to prosecute the "New World Order". There are two problems. Firstly, most of the social circumstances I can find myself with others in America simply don't offer the atmosphere where this kind of talk is appropriate. I will have to go out of my way to find a social setting where this kind of discussion is normal – such as during my targeted individuals' meetings. But then I run into the second problem, which is that nobody is intellectual and educated enough to be able to understand what I'm saying, let alone believe this. In other words, I have a stigma, worse than hermaphroditism or being Jewish in Nazi Germany, because, even when I have the courage to tell someone about my stigma, no one is going to understand it. At least everyone understands what a hermaphrodite is and everyone in Nazi Germany knows what is a Jew.

I hope you can somewhat see the problem. All the talk out there on the Internet about mind-control and microchipping technology only gives you a glimpse into the most rudimentary forms, not into this most extreme form which is my experience; nobody has so far comprehended the ultimate goal of US and NATO governments' mind-control technology, which is to bring human thoughts themselves under centralized administration, and to rid the common people of their free will once and for all. The existing talk which has hinted at this technology is horrifyingly optimistic; it is harmful in that it diverts your attention away from the harm it can do to you by emphasizing its benefits in a limited number of cases. Read the time line of the evolution of mind-control technology in this article: <http://www.harmlesswise.com/0706-implantable-chips>. It mentions, for example: "2004: Matthew Nagle, a 25-year-old quadriplegic, is the first human fitted with the BrainGate Neural Interface. It enables him to control a computer 'mouse' cursor and press its button." As if this technology is going to do us so much good! The microchip inside my head allowing me to be forcibly interfaced with the computer in the control center operates essentially by the same principle as this BrainGate Neural Interface. While the microchip allows the computer to read my thoughts by picking up the pattern of electrical activities in my brain, it can also allow the computer to remotely control me by artificially inducing the pattern of electrical activities in my brain which correspond to the actions or thoughts which the computer wants me to perform or think. Yet this is nothing funny or beneficial. For I have now lost the ability to determine my own actions but have become a puppet of another being. And yet you cannot comprehend the horror of this loss of free will because most of you have never learned the skill of learning something new from your peers but can only incorporate new knowledge and a new way of looking at things from the authority – and only after the authority has tremendously simplified the issue for you. That's how hopelessly stupid you ordinary people are – even when you listen regularly to a man whom you think to be a guru (like Alex Jones).

To understand what I have been through – and to understand what your own government has once been planning to do to you, although it is now unlikely to do it to you thanks to this trial I'm caught in – you have to learn a new way of looking at reality. Ordinary people can only learn from their peers those things they already know or things which are compatible with what they already know. When I tell the organizer of my targeted individuals support group about how my thoughts are read and my actions remotely controlled via the microchip inside my head, she assumes that I'm "V2K". She never understands anything I say – even though she herself seems to have been microchipped in the head thanks to her association with me – because "microchipping to allow for government's central administration of your thoughts" is not anything like what she already knows; nor can she ever understand "a secret International Court trial". She gains her knowledge of "targeting" and "implants" from the "talk out there" which, like I have said, barely scratches the surface of the mind-control issues: those chatter about mind-control on the Internet and in the targeted individuals community has never gone anywhere near "central administration of thoughts" and "destruction of free will" and has never gone beyond the model of "victimization" and "experimentation". Yet the "talk out there" is what has determined what she is, and what you are, capable of understanding and believing. "Victimization", "experimentation", "implant to track you", "energy weapons to cause you pain" constitute her "paradigm", "what she already knows", and this "paradigm", her way of looking at reality, does not contain anything more complicated, like "remotely controlling you like a robot". Anything I told her which is more complicated would have to be distorted into one of those simple things in this paradigm, like "Voice to Skull to annoy you", otherwise she could not even conceive it.

This is all very sad for she will never one day comprehend what has happened to her. She will never one day understand how she has been victimized – just as a cow in the factory farm never understands why he is being cramped into such a uncomfortable space and burned and beaten and then slaughtered. To understand why he suffers, the cow will have to understand human economy, the division of labor in human society, and how human beings produce food to support this complex division of labor. How can the cow understand that? The "talk out there" has simply not prepared the minority among us who are interested in "weird things" in the first place for the real, serious agendas of the Western elites. Despite your confidence, the "conspiracy theorists" have hardly comprehended what the Western elites are really planning to do to you. The "elites" have always been right when they say "common people are too stupid to understand what are their best interests", even though the "elites" are lying when they say "We should therefore rule them for their own good".

And yet, I have premonition that, if I go to Russia, for about 1 out of 100 persons there, this story of "a secret International Court trial which requires people to be microchipped" just like "the US-NATO plan to microchip every person and bring him or her under a central computer's remote control" will not appear strange at all – because the Russian government has told them about this trial since 2010. This is what I'm talking about: in Russia a discussion about my mind-control experience might actually not be out of place in a large number of social circumstances and might actually not fly over people's head by demanding from them a new way of looking at reality – this thanks to the efforts which the Russian government may have already spent in sowing the seeds of this weird story in the consciousness of ordinary people who otherwise can never have imagined "microchipping to make all human beings remotely controlled robots". The Russian government, I suppose, has however informed only a selected portion of its people, foremost the military and security (police) personnel, then other public personnel of the governmental machinery, and perhaps a small portions of private citizens and workers and executives of relevant businesses. I would calculate the number of these people to be approximately 1.5 million – about 1 out of 100 persons in Russia. I don't suppose the Russian government has got into the details, but it would have at least told these people that "there is this secret bizarre trial in the International Court in which Russia is caught and where, if Russia loses, Putin may be microchipped in the head to allow some criminals in America to remotely control him like a robot – and nobody will notice it, which tells you how powerful this microchipping system is." The Russian government may have also mentioned that a lot of people around the world, especially in countries of the Western alliance, have been microchipped in the same way in order to facilitate the course of this trial. Actually, a significant portion of the public personnel and military officers in China should also have been told about this, although they would constitute far less than 1 percent of the Chinese population. Actually, a significant portion of the US military personnel should also have been told about this. I think LAPD and SFPD also have some knowledge of this. Governments in countries like Iran and India should also have done the same as the Russian government.

Do you understand what I'm saying? I can at last openly speak about my stigma with a significant portion of the population without running into the problem that no one understands what I'm saying. I may very well find people to whom I can say, "Oh, my biggest concern is that I am caught in this trial which causes me to be microchipped; this trial where your country is involved", and they might just respond, "Oh yeah, I have heard about that! You are being controlled by a computer right? That's awful!" I will at last be on the same page with others! I will no longer have to live in a reality which no one else has access to, as if I were autistic! They may even refer me to a doctor to extract the microchip for me! But, if I go to Russia, the people I would have regular access to will of course only be the lower end of the people who have been told about me. That is, petty officers of the civilian and military wings of the Russian government. The Russian military personnel I will be able to talk to about me will be mostly young conscripts; together with police officers or low level government functionaries, these are not the people who are capable of any sort of in-depth understanding of my extraordinary experience. I may be able to hang with career low level military officers, who can probably understand something. Given all this there thus arises the need for me to introduce the matter into academic discourses, to bring it to the attention of professors and scholars who have the intelligence and education to understand the details of my experience. That will be my next goal: to infuse "my reality" into the collective consciousness of humankind. The problem is that I cannot do this by myself. I will need the help of Russian authority. The problem is that UN has passed laws to require that governments around the world keep this trial a secret for themselves; the Russian government has done the limited disclosure in its territory only as an exceptional and emergency measure. Assuming that those who have so far been told about my story will be permitted to tell me what they have been told about me – this is not even certain – if I wish to go beyond these inexpert audience but have to do it myself without official help, I will run into the same problem as I have been running into in the Western world.

Like I have said, if you are reading this, besides not understanding anything I say here, you probably are not going to take me seriously – because I'm just one private person without the backing of official organs. When the government – any government in the world – tells you the same thing I'm telling you here, then you will pay attention, and this "secret trial which requires so many people to be microchipped and remotely controlled by a super computer" will suddenly register in your head, whether or not you are a conspiracy theorist who distrusts the government or a main-stream citizen who believes anything the authority says. This is simply a sad fact of modern life: in the modern world people have shaped their belief system to attune themselves to "official organs" rather than to their peers. Only a very few private persons have had the talent and aggression to develop an information empire capable of competing with official organs in the game of shaping people's belief system – like Alex Jones here. Yet even someone like Alex Jones can only capture the attention of a minority of people who are naturally inclined to like "weird things", not everyone. If you are just a ordinary private person, having neither the backing of official organs nor the resources which Alex Jones for example has built up over many years, then, you can only get people's attention for what you say when you speak about something they already believe. Since what I'm telling you here goes beyond your wildest imagination – beyond your current "paradigm" – it is hopeless for me to convince you of the truthfulness – and importance – of any part of my story.

To tell my story I will thus need to obtain the sponsorship of "official organs". Remember that my first goal is to find some "official organs" which have already been circulating parts of my story in the public domain and then cut into the game. The fact that the official organs in Russia (and possibly other countries outside the Western block) have already been registering in the mind of a selected minority of its population elements of what has happened to me thus attracts me to this land. Russia remains the best option, not just because of this, but also in view of my second goal: obtaining the help of authority in introducing my story into specialized and expert discussion in academia. This might be possible because it would just not make sense for Putin to keep the knowledge of this trial away from the consciousness of his people, insofar as what is being tried is nothing short of Western elites' one-time project to exterminate the Russian state. A nationalist like him should have the desire to warn his people about some foreigners' desires to harm their country. The only obstacle to his wish would be the aforementioned international laws forbidding him to do so. And yet he may very well have found ways to overcome these laws. Thus, I may not have to do this (the propagation of my story among better audience) all by myself if I end up in Russia! China is the next best option; but not only are the percentage of people who know about this in China much lower, but the Chinese government has always been characteristically conservative when it comes to revealing its embarrassing moments to its people – even if it doesn't purposely lie to its people as often and as pervasively as Western governments do to their people. Obama is even less likely to reveal it: for to reveal it means that the Chinese government and Obama would have to tell their people that many Chinese government officials and Obama himself have once been microchipped in the head to be made into some American criminals' personal remotely controlled robots. Too embarrassing!

ABSTRACT OF THE TRIAL TO WHICH I AM REFERING, OR THE CAUSE OF MY MIND CONTROL SUFFERING: When I flew to China and then over Russia in late 2007 and early 2008 a dispute arose in the International Court of Justice between Russia/China and United States/Western nations over intentional false information which the US government has shared with the Chinese and Russian government about me – about who I am and what I do and so on – in clear violation of international agreements. The US government won the lawsuit by proving that I was intentionally flying to China to allow China to sue the US over the US false information about me. China lost and Russia withdrew. The US government raised the same lawsuit again with the Russian government in the International Court in September 2008. (Technically speaking this was a lawsuit between the CIA and the Russian intelligence service SVR.) By the time Russia has won the lawsuit in February 2010, the parties in the lawsuit have all changed. The US government has split up, with Obama administration siding with Russia to prosecute, as common criminals planning a criminal conspiracy to harm United States, China, and Russia, the few US officials who have raised the lawsuit on CIA's behalf against Russia in the first place. Furthermore, by that time, a few European nations have joined these "common criminals" to fight the new alliance of US, China, and Russia. Unfortunately, in the process I was microchipped in my brain to allow the computer in the court room to read my thoughts and discover my true intention, for, if I was found by the "common criminals" and their European allies to be helping Russia, Russia (and its new allies) would lose the trial. The trial then continues until this day when complication occurred in the middle of 2010 and the European allies of the "common criminals" offered new evidences showing that I was indeed helping Russia. In the process, the scope of the trial has enlarged to such an extent that all the crimes which the Western alliance have committed against Russia and against Western citizens in the past two decades (commonly known as the "New World Order") have been incorporated into the same trial for resolution once and for all, and the microchip implanted in my head has been reconfigured to allow the computer in the court room to remotely control me instead of just reading my thoughts. All my close contacts and tens of thousands of people in my environment and beyond, have also been microchipped to be remotely controlled in the same way, because we have to be controlled to produce the evidences needed for the prosecution of all the crimes in question. The trial has become a circus, and evidences are no longer gathered but are all artificially produced. This is my current predicament.

The following is my latest blog post: "How DARPA thought-reading computer can predict your thoughts"

(<http://www.lawrencechin2011.com/blogs/2012/09/07/how-darpa-thought-reading-computer-can-predict-your-thoughts/>):

I want to here share with you my recently acquired understanding of how the DARPA thought-reading computer can also predict a person's thoughts years into the future.

When DARPA's thought-reading computer came into service in the middle of 2008, it had not this capacity to predict thoughts. By the end of 2009, the Pentagon has developed another computer system to simulate worldly events as a way to predict the future. This second computer system has been reported on Sibel Edmond's website: <http://www.boilingfrogspost.com/2012/07/04/the-eyeopener-sentient-world-simulation-meet-your-dod-clone/>. Called "the Sentient World Simulation", its purpose is "to be a continuously running, continually updated mirror model of the real world that can be used to predict and evaluate future events and courses of action." In practical terms that equates to a computer simulation of the planet complete with billions of 'nodes' representing every person on the earth." Now comes the catch. I have said that the DARPA thought-reading technology has demonstrated that our free will is but an illusion, that our thought-process in fact follows very regular patterns as if we are machines. During the middle of 2010, some scientists who have been recruited into the control center – I don't know who they are – have discovered that the DARPA thought-reading computer can allow them to construct an (albeit extremely complex) mathematical model for describing human thought-processes. This is possible because the very physiological substrates of the human brain operate in strict mathematical fashions. Take a look for example at this news item reporting on MIT neurologists' discovery that our perception and other cognitive processes are achieved and fine-tuned through highly selective repression of the activities of the brain cells associated with the processes in question by other groups of specialized brain cells, and that this repression takes the form of strictly mathematical operations (in this case, subtraction and division): <http://web.mit.edu/newsoffice/2012/simple-mathematical-computations-underlie-brain-circuits-0809.html>. Once the scientists have used the thought-reading computer to which my thoughts are interfaced to develop a complete mathematical model which describes completely and globally my thought-processes (the thought-process and mood structure of an intellectual and Borderline Personality) – and once they have discovered that they could do the same with other people whose thoughts are being read – they decided to feed the models and the data into the "Sentient World Simulation" and then connect this "Sentient World Simulation" to the thought-reading computer. Using the mathematical models describing human thought-processes, the Sentient World Simulation can predict the thoughts of all the people whose thoughts are being read several years into the future – even as these people interact with each other and thus change each other's thoughts: for human interaction itself has become an extension of the mathematical models developed to describe human thought-processes. When the thought-reading computer and the Sentient World Simulation form one system, you now have a "continuously running, continually updated mirror model of the internal states of all the people whose thoughts are being read which can be used to predict and evaluate the future internal states of all the subjects under consideration."

Hi,

My recent mind-control experience: depressing conclusions

Don't hurt your self. I am also victim like you.

Daily they are torturing me, squeezing my testicals.

Here is my story

<http://prasad519.blogspot.in/2012/11/electrode.html>

join in victim groups in yahoogroups peacepink.com

Sincere request, add me to your frinds list. Update me with your latest findings quite a few companies out there offering "Technical Surveillance Counter Measures," or sweeps to determine if you are the victim of electronic harassment.

search google
